

July 9, 2019

Dear Member of Congress,

The undersigned organizations are writing to express our strong support for the Protecting Sensitive Locations Act of 2019, sponsored by Senator Richard Blumenthal, which would expand and codify existing federal agency guidance related to immigration enforcement actions at so-called “sensitive locations,” including places of worship, health care facilities, and schools. As organizations committed to promoting the health, economic security, educational opportunity, and overall safety and wellbeing of children, families, and individuals, we are united in our commitment to ensuring all immigrants and their families can carry out basic activities and access crucial services without fear of arrest, detention, or deportation.

Internal agency guidelines instruct federal immigration agents to avoid enforcement actions—including apprehensions, arrests, interviews, searches, and surveillance—at certain “sensitive locations” without written approval, except in exigent circumstances. This common-sense policy recognizes that immigrants and their families should be able to carry out basic activities such as attending school, accessing medical care, participating in religious or civil ceremonies, and celebrating or mourning loved ones without fear of enforcement. However, troubling reports of immigrants being arrested while performing the basic activities that sensitive locations guidelines are meant to safeguard—such as dropping off their children at school or awaiting surgery at the hospital—call into question whether the sensitive locations policy is being consistently enforced.

Legislation that codifies and expands the sensitive locations policy is particularly urgent in this current moment, when ramped-up enforcement and anti-immigrant policies have fostered a climate of fear in communities around the country. Research and media reports describe immigrant families drastically altering their daily lives to avoid contact with immigration agents. Immigrant parents are keeping their children home from school and child care and avoiding other important resources in their communities, like public libraries. Health care providers are experiencing more no-shows for regular appointments; women are delaying or forgoing prenatal care; and some families are even fearful to take their children to the hospital for emergency care. And in some communities, immigrants are fearful of calling the police for help or appearing in court. This heightened anxiety and withdrawal from the community has serious consequences for the health and wellbeing of immigrants and their families, as well as broader implications for the communities where they live and work.

The Protecting Sensitive Locations Act would help to reassure immigrant communities of their safety in accessing these and other essential services and supports. The Act expands and improves upon existing agency guidance in important ways. Notably, by prohibiting enforcement actions within 1,000 feet of sensitive locations and expanding the list of locations deemed “sensitive,” the policy extends protections to other areas that are critical to immigrants’ safety and security. The bill also improves accountability by laying out a remedy process for individuals that are arrested or detained during enforcement actions that occur in violation of the policy and requiring ICE and CBP to regularly report violations to Congress. Removing ambiguity and increasing transparency are important steps to ensuring the sensitive locations policy is enforced appropriately and consistently across the country.

Ensuring that individuals and families have the basic services and supports they need to thrive is our nation’s imperative. Restricting immigration enforcement actions from occurring at certain locations is common-sense policy. No one should ever have to choose between obtaining medical care, going to school, seeking justice, getting a driver's license, or celebrating or mourning a loved one and keeping their families together. We urge you stand with families and co-sponsor the Protecting Sensitive Locations Act.

Sincerely,
